I am yet to watch this TV series since I always prefer to wait until the last episode. However, some critics have been claiming that the last season seems to have been rushed, with the endings in some episodes seeming so obvious. Is there some truth to this?

I've really been enjoying this season. There is a lot of depth to each episode as they're setting the plot up for the grand finale. For some, they don't prefer to watch what they would call filler epsidoes. It's the opposite of rushed, though. There's been some really great scenes. Wouldn't want to spoil anything for anyone, but don't let the Negative Nancy's get you down. :d

I've enjoyed it on and off, but sometimes the violence gets too harsh and I'll find myself needing a break again. I've been hanging in there for this final season though.

Hey Wanderer, the Negative Nancy's will not manage to dampen my resolve. I always prefer to watch a TV series to the end, rather than to do this in bits. It isn't easy to do this with spoilers flying all over the internet (I have seen Tyrion trending for the better part of yesterday). Madison, those harsh scenes can be overwhelming but I guess they add to the flair of watching an epic series.

Now that the show is over I gotta ask @mamoss did you ever start watching Game of Thrones?

@TheWanderer have you been converted to a Negative Nancy thanks to the ending? So many dedicated fans were furious at the ending. I wasn't happy either. I don't want to spoil it in case

Mamoss is still planning to watch.

Despite all the hype around Game of Thrones, the show has never really struck my fancy. I tried watching a few episodes, but I just couldn't stay focused on it.
