There were times when I like to lie down on a bed while watching inside the cinema. If I have enough money to create a new home theater, then I will place a movable bed so I can lie down while watching. Which would you prefer in your home theater, a bed or reclining sofa?

I flop on the sofa. They still make chaise lounge chairs that might look more appropriate in a home theater room than a bed. But hey, whatever trips ones trigger as they say.

You can say that again. A sofa is really what we need in a theater for aesthetic purposes. I think there are sofas that can be converted into a small bed if I'm not mistaken.

The sofa beds and daybeds that I've tried aren't that comfortable plus it would be a hassle to make and unmake the bed each time to convert it back to its other form.

Everyone knows you need a good recliner in your home theater room. I'm pretty sure I read that in a magazine somewhere at one time. Recliners are great because they allow you to be lazy without looking like you are lazy, they have these huge areas on the sides that are great for hiding the snacks you aren't supposed to have, and you can kick back and relax or even take a quick nap if you're watching Frozen for the billionth time with your kiddo.

My wife and kids got me some traditional movie theater seats, but I always worry about spilling stuff on them so I rarely sit there.

I saw a massaging sofa last weekend when I went to the mall. I think that will be the best sofa for a home theater because it can help us get relief while watching.

I have a bed with controls that move your back and head up and inclines so your knees go up. It's a sleep number with controls for both mattresses, so that would be my home theatre lounge.

I would just have to convince my woman to make our bedroom double as a home entertainment room.

Tell her that with a bed in the home theater room, mirrored tiles on the ceiling make the room seem larger.

Airforce: Just sayin' -

I'm not pokin' at you here. I just couldn't resist.

My wife and I have a home theater setup in our bedroom too.

So I'm kinda likin' all this trash-talk. :lol:

I'd go with a reclining sofa. A sofa would look aesthetically better than just a regular bed. Also, if you end up using your home theater with guests, it would be easier to fit multiple people on a sofa than having everyone cram onto a bed.

I would definitely go for the recliners. I fall asleep easy enough in those in a theater. If I had a bed in there, I wouldn't watch an entire movie ever. I'd pass out within 30 minutes or so.

I'm going to vote for a bed. That way, the entertainment room can double as a guest room. Also, you can get some comfy pillows and prop them up so you have the equivalent of a recliner.

I'd be choosing the reclining sofa because I think that it would be more convenient eating the movie snacks while on it. It would also be harder to fall asleep there since the space wouldn't be so big.

I'd go with a recliner like this

Good leather, luxury look, and comfort. What else do you need?

I've tried watching movies while in bed and only ended up using pillows to have that reclined position. It was inconvenient since the support on the head wasn't as stable with only the pillows. So for sure that when watching movies, a wide reclining sofa would work for me.

Recliner for me. When I'm sitting up or slightly reclined I can see the screen better. It's more at eye level. That, and it makes bathroom breaks easier

A reclining sofa similar to some gaming chairs would be convenient because you can even control the angle of your vision while avoiding any strain on your neck. It lets you relax that the next thing you know, you're probably asleep.
