I love sports as much as music. I'm a Steelers fan - all my life. What a heartbreaking season so far. Our quarterback is out for the season and we started 0 and 3.

Anyone feeling my pain?

Not for the Steelers, no. Sorry, they were never my team. The only non-winning team so far that I feel bad for are The Cardinals. Rookie Quarterback and rookie coach. Growing pains are expected with that, but I hope they don't get too discouraged and keep fighting. They seem like a good bunch of guys down there.

It is kind of sad to see them start that low. The Steelers are synonymous with strength and there is nothing strong about 0-3.

At least you're not a Dolphins fan. :lol:

Yes! I hate it for Roethlisberger as he was having such a great season and it's got to be frustrating to be sidelined for the whole season. I'm sure winding up on the reserve/injured list was the farthest thing from his mind. I'm watching the game with them and the Bengals and it's intense. They aren't doing terrible without Roethlisberger by any means and are ahead at halftime.

It's too bad Roethlisberger is out, but for as long as he's been playing, (how long now?), it's due to happen in football. The Steelers have always been a tough team to play against. Always liked the name of, The Black And Blue Division they're part of. Living in KC Mo. home of the Chiefs I'd rather Pittsburg have him in there to make the competition at it's peak. They were a dynasty once, and that's nothing to sneeze at.

Everything about the game was different back then. For example, it was easy to dominate for 5 or 6 years because good players stuck around. Free agency wasn't a thing and there was more a sense of family within the team.

They won! 1-3 now, with a tough game on Sunday, the Ravens!
Rudolph played great, but our defense was spot on. It was hard seeing Big Ben on the sidelines! He's saying he will be back next season, will see if they need him.

But New England seems to be an exception to that. It's gotten monotonous to see them in the super bowl or in the running year in, year out.
Of the professional sports. Football for me should give the most money for their players. Their lifespan on average is so short to the other sports. It's all too rich for my wallet.

That's a good point. And while they're at it, the NFL should have programs that teach their players financial responsibility so they're not broke 2 years after they leave.

I'm sure they do Nouri, but you know what they say about leading horses to water.

It will be interesting to see how this season is going to happen though. If it does.

If this year's NFL season gets started, here's what I would like to see: 16 teams starting 0 and 3 and 16 teams starting 3 and 0. Let's make this season more interesting than it's already going to be. :lol:
