Hi Everyone, The present times have created a lot of difficulties. Most retail locations are closed and those that are open don't always have what you really, really need. We had a "catastrophic" event two days ago..... our long suffering Bunn coffee maker started to make serious noises that were not normal. Essentially it crapped out. 11 years is a pretty good run on coffee makers here. The previous experience has been for other brands about 2 years. We even use filtered water to extend the life. Thus a quick check of local vendors and none carried the replacement in store. Bummer, deprivation was on the horizon. :? While I am not completely in admiration of Amazon they did have them. Zap the credit card and two days later a new coffee maker appears. :) Thanks. I hope you all have few debacles during the current times and can solve them as easily as we did. :roll:

Sweet!

Actually made your repair job easier, sounds like! Click and go! Parts arrive a few days later. Bada-bing, bada-boom!

Amazon has it's uses. When you have something that is sort of a specialty item, Amazon is the go-to because there are thousands of stores in there. The Wal-Marts of the world are good for the basics.

Technology made my life so easy. Online ordering is one of those things that I am more appreciative about because there ain't any stress or frustration that comes with it. I will order for a product and this is it at my doorstep, so easy and swift.

Thank goodness for online ordering. Thank goodness that we are no longer living in the primitive age where things will always remain the way it is until we move a hand. Thank goodness that technology came and we started benefitting from it. I've used Amazon for almost all my online ordering and I've never regretted it.
