You come home, open the door, and music starts automatically playing. As if opening the door triggers the stereo to start playing a predetermined song.

Do you think something like this would sell well?

I suppose the technology these days makes it very feasible. I sure don't need it, but I'm determined to keep some amount of physical connection to devices occur. Using a turntable and having tube audio equipment makes one be aware of synchronizing on and off of equipment and getting up to adjusting volume and record sides. I actually enjoy that.

Sounds like a great way to impress a date. Open the door and Kenny G is in the house.

Actually, if you really want to impress a special lady.....invent it.
