What is the best way to find music that is nearly impossible to find? Bands you have never heard of, let alone anyone else, can put out quality music. But how do you find them?

Good question. I learn of a lot of new singers by people sharing their music on Facebook. I don't really know of other ways to find new artist.

Looking through blogs may help find old records depending on the site's niche. Hardcore fans will surely be the most knowledgeable about these genres. Searching up indie works can also lead you to discover new kinds of music one after another.

There are music sites that feature extensive song, album, or artist lists, and some bring up forgotten singers or songs. I bookmarked a 70s album list from Rolling Stone. Another good source is YouTube. So many vloggers. I really like the channel Bandsplaining for info on pop/rock topics that haven't gotten much notice because of age or other reasons.
