My father recently installed a surround sound system in his living room. It's really immersive and I enjoy watching movies with him so much more now. I love that a surround sound system really plunges you into a movie's action using the audio.

I bet watching horror or thriller movies there would be an experience almost similar to having a theater. Just be careful since you might not even hear it when someone's calling. :)

I would love a surround sound system for gaming! Using those on shooting games would be a blast and perhaps more stressful, but I bet it'll be worth the experience. Is the system specific to a single function, or can it be used for both movies and gaming?

Are the surround sound systems compatible with any Smart TV? That seems interesting to have, but I was wondering if these kinds of speakers are also universal.

In my experience, Spotifier, they work with all types of TVs from all different brands. If all else fails, you could always try using a conversion kit to make it work.

I think this will be our next project. I imagine it would take watching movies to the next level! I bet the little ones would love it for gaming too.

One of the better inventions of the past 100 years, I would say. Sometimes what you're listening to demands surround sound in order to be appreciated on the level it should.

I bet that surround sound can work for both gaming and also for watching movies. The experience is special when you play shooting games such as Call of Duty or Battlefield games on the TV. Those are the types of games that always show how much of a good feature the surround sound is and why it is necessary for many homes.
