What is it with Networks pulling TV shows off their basic network and adding them to a + network. For instance CBS pulled Seal Team and put in on Paramount +. I pay enough for cable, shouldn't the networks just show their shows!

They want your money Lebowski! Coming in regular and easy. That's the way our economy works these days.

That sucks because if that's happening now, TV cables might just become a thing of the past. Companies will do anything to make you keep your subscriptions. They could see which channels have more viewers and start to use them to gain revenue from that even if it was free before.

They know all the angles and they've mapped it out to maximize their profit. Then the bigger companies will devour the smaller until it's just a few left that will control the pricing. Otherwise known as monopolies. That's how our economy works these days. The future keeps getting brighter all the time.

I just catch air tv and use the Roku to grab whatever programming that isn't total junk. It's mostly junk. But so is the payfer streaming from my gander at it.

That is just DRIPPING with sarcasm. :lol:

I have kind of given up on T.V. at this point. I do have Little House On The Prairie on as background noise right now though. It's a good, wholesome thing to wake up to.

I couldn't agree more than - they want your money! I saw that Seal Team was going to Paramount +. Heck no! We love that show but I'm not paying another streaming service. Cable television is already crazy ridiculous!
