Are there sound effects that make you cringe? Scratching a fork on the plate produces torturesome noise. It's the same with the sound where chalk runs across the blackboard. Are there worst sounds than these?

It's only a gripe. But sounds in the vacuum of outer space. Rockets firing, explosions. There ain't no air there to transfer kinetic energy. I'm sure it's done only because of expectation. Only movie I can think got it right was Kubrick's 2001.

I hate to hear dogs barking, babies crying, or anything scraping against glass. I don't know why, but those sounds set my teeth on edge.

It's not because of poor quality, but I'm not fond of hearing the sound effects of children or babies laughing. I find it creepy, and it stays with me that I end up imagining it after a movie. Sometimes, they're not even realistic and don't have that human touch to them.

I hate those sounds too. The fork on a plate thing makes me tense up every single time. Same with the chalk on the blackboard. I can feel it in my teeth.

For me the worst one is when someone scrapes a metal spatula on a non-stick pan. That high squeaky noise drives me nuts. Or when the mic cable gets stepped on and you get that sudden crackle during a session. I always jump when that happens.

I also can't stand the sound of styrofoam rubbing together. It makes my skin crawl. Have you got any others that get to you like that?

Death metal and Hip Hop give similar psycho physical reactions too.
