Thanks for sharing. You tend to post songs from the same genre, so does that mean you also enjoy listening to BTS and BlackPink? Do you think that BTS has changed since they've become so wildly successful in the United States? I have a friend who loves Asian Pop, and she says that BTS has become too Americanized and commercial. I think they sound exactly the same as always. Their song content has become more mature as they've aged, but that's to be expected. What's your take on it?

Madison,
I am not into BTS and BlackPink. For singers I like not every song is good. For Kpop I like Jamie Park, Sam Kim, Kwon Jin Ah, and NewJeans. For Cpop I like Shan Yichun. I like to introduce you guys to good songs you never heard of. There are good songs all over the world and not just in the United States.

Get hip to the tip with some Tokyo Groove Jyoshi. Combining the old with the new playing some very hip funk. Fabulous musicians. The bass player is phenomenal doing that p-funk style.

I've been on a Jazz bender, principally by a couple of sax men of the golden age of jazz. Gene Ammons or Mean Gene I call him. He plays a mean mellow sax. Swings real nice.
From the album High Fidelity Jam Session.

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_JBHAAaYzMY

Then there's, The Hawk. Coleman Hawkins. Goes way back, and again, he's got that swing thing.
Here jammin live with old Joshua Fit the Battle of Jericho.

Yep, I've watched some of his videos. The bass player is usually relegated to anonymity. Unless they can sing, like Paul McCartney or Sting, Willie Dixon. But I've liked picking up on what the bass man, or woman, plucks. Like Tina Weymouth of the Talking Heads or Bruce Thomas, one of the Attractions of Elvis Costello, or the tattooed mysterious junkie bassist of the blues band Fabulous Thunderbirds. Whose monkey on his back, literally and figuratively shortened his life.
