I nominate The Last of Us. Loved the two lead actors (mixed feelings about Bella Ramsey at first) and various guests, including Nick Offerman in the third episode.

I haven't seen that one, Noodle. I'll give it a look.

I've been captivated by the new Netflix series, Poker Face. Natasha Lyonne is simply dazzling. Part of my fascination is that I'd like to have the same skill - being a human lie detector. Apparently there's some science behind it. Unfortunately, I'm horrible at lying and detecting lies as well. The series is worth a watch. The cinematography is shot beautifully, it's well cast, and the story is captivating.

That does look like an interesting show dervlin. I don't have Netflix but maybe it will filter down to being able to watch on the roku eventually.
As for lie detection skills, a course primer would be to watch, listen or read anything coming from what a former commander in chief says. That's called pathological lying.

This looks intriguing! Lyonne's great in Russian Doll. I finished Barry, and a while before that I saw Beef. They both get more intense, violent, and weird as the episodes unfold. I liked them.

I watched Beauty and Black both the season 1 and 2. The series captivated my attention from the season 1 and I waited for the season 2 to be out. An interesting series that I've watched like twice now.

My favourite series was Shógun though the season 2 isn't out yet, I'm looking forward to when it be out. A very cool movie that I paid attention from the first episode to the last one. Vincenzo will be my second favourite.

The year just started and I am yet to figure any movie series that I can pick as the best that I've seen. I am currently busy with some academic programmes that I just started for the year and will surely create time to see some movies in the next few weeks.
