Subject: Aesthetic Sensitivity
Posted by Silver on Wed, 17 May 2023 00:42:08 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I'm sure we've all heard the story about the woman at an L.A. Philharmonic performance. No need to go into detail about that, but this might explain what happened:

https://highlysensitiverefuge.com/what-is-aesthetic-sensitivity/

https://nypost.com/2023/05/01/woman-has-full-body-orgasm-during-la-philharmonic-concert/

As a music lover myself, I can attest that few people seem to show as much of an interest as I do. I never knew there was a term to describe people who are highly sensitive to art, but it sure explains a lot.

Subject: Re: Aesthetic Sensitivity
Posted by Concorde on Wed, 17 May 2023 04:34:13 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Tchaikovsky's 5th is going to see a rise in popularity, I'm sure.

I don't know much about classical music, but I do know about rock and country before they became so commercialized. There were many a song that could bring a tear to a grown man's eye, and songs were made specifically to emit those kinds of emotions. Highly sensitive people just ate it up, so artists kept it coming.

Like the old saying goes: "Music has charms to soothe a savage breast."

Subject: Re: Aesthetic Sensitivity
Posted by Rusty on Wed, 17 May 2023 11:51:53 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Surprised the maestro didn't stop the music and tell the woman to, "get a room" to release her spasms in. That's pretty flakey. Only in LA though right? Appropriately in the Walt Disney concert hall, in the building that looks like a looney tune psychedelic trip.

Subject: Re: Aesthetic Sensitivity
Posted by Strum Drum on Wed, 10 Jul 2024 03:35:44 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I guess it's similar to fans who faint during concerts, or those who feel moved to tears while listening to a beautiful opera. Music can evoke all sorts of emotions. Maybe that's why it's endured as a popular form of entertainment for ages.

Concorde wrote on Tue, 16 May 2023 23:34
Like the old saying goes: "Music has charms to soothe a savage breast."
First time I've heard that one. It's spot on.

Subject: Re: Aesthetic Sensitivity
Posted by Kingfish on Fri, 12 Jul 2024 16:20:02 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yeah, you couldn't really blame the woman. It's not like she planned it out. The body will do what the body will do.

I have to say though, I never heard of a no-touch orgasm prompted by music. I'm sure it's happened before.