I've enjoyed youtubes of people going through old missile silo's, caves and such.
See what you think about this video presented as a "found" location. Pretty darn creepy.
The rest you can easily find out rootin around the net. Very talented.

Thumbs up. This reminds me of this mini-movie I saw where a kid has to go to the family's basement while his parents are out. Spoilers ahead

On the phone, the mom asks him to count out loud each step as he goes down the staircase. The counting never stops.

Is there any way a person can find out the location of where a You Tube video is shot?

Private property my butt.

Part of that looked like the place where they shot some of the Saw movie scenes.

There is a link on the youtube page of the video to get some information on the young man that created this piece. I think he's an aspiring video artist. What I think he has done is to use editing of locations and some computerized CGI to craft this narrative of a mysterious pathway descending downward to a enigmatic realm that has no objective reason to be there. I think it was very effectively done. Kid's got talent I think. Hope he parlays it into a useful career.

However it was done, that kid has a talent.

However, there are only so many ways that could be used for movie sets, and none of the story line options are very positive.
