Subject: Do supporting actors get much say in sequels?
Posted by Becky on Mon, 29 Sep 2025 01:52:41 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I am asking if there is always a possibility of an A-list actor saying how they want a sequel to a movie to be. For example, what would have happened had Arnold said that he doesn't want to be the good guy in Terminator 2?

Would the director listen to him or just call his bluff or something? How does it work?

Subject: Re: Do supporting actors get much say in sequels?
Posted by Helen on Tue, 30 Sep 2025 12:31:11 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I do think that the opinions of supporting actors should be considered. They must have been in the industry for a long time and would want to share their views on how they would want the movie to be done. What I can't say is what happens when there is a difference in opinions.

Subject: Re: Do supporting actors get much say in sequels?
Posted by Prince on Sat, 11 Oct 2025 17:44:48 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Becky wrote on Sun, 28 September 2025 20:52I am asking if there is always a possibility of an A-list actor saying how they want a sequel to a movie to be. For example, what would have happened had Arnold said that he doesn't want to be the good guy in Terminator 2?

Would the director listen to him or just call his bluff or something? How does it work?
I am imagining how much power an actor could have before they can talk that they have a big say on how a movie should be like. Maybe it is possible for the top stars, but I still see it as an awkward situation.

Subject: Re: Do supporting actors get much say in sequels?
Posted by Bercle on Wed, 01 Apr 2026 16:59:34 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

There are actors who must have done a lot, even going as far as promoting the main movie. I see nothing wrong with such an actor having a say in the sequel of a movie that they featured in. The reason is simply that they now see such a movie as their project, too.