Weird places as it is stated are places where no one would have expected anyone to be listening to the radio. Is there a particular place that you've ever stayed to listen to the radio that seemed off? I can say that I've listened to the radio a couple of times in the toilet. That is a place that I didn't see myself staying to listen to the radio, but I had to.

I have gone to the park to listen to the radio. I plugged in my earphones, anyone that looked at me will think that I'm listening to a podcast or a song but I was the only one that know that it was a radio. I took interest to listen that day because it was a talk show with a very interesting topic.

It seems the park wasn't noisy that day or you were able to figure out a cool place in the park where you sat to listen to the radio. Either ways, it must have been a really fun experience for you!

Oh, I got lucky that day. The park can be noisy sometimes, but I've learned a few little quiet corners to sneak off to when I want a breather. Sitting there with the earphones felt so peaceful and it's one of the few moments I get to myself, so I really enjoyed it.

Honestly, the toilet might be the funniest one but I've done something similar. I've listened to the radio in my school's storage room once because it was the only quiet place I could hide during a break. It was kind of weird sitting there between boxes and old chairs but it actually felt peaceful for a few minutes.
