I am currently planning to get a good Bluetooth speaker that has better sound quality and is dependable. I mean a device that has strong battery life and I can get value for money spent.

I've been checking out Sony SRS-XV500, Ultimate Ears Boom 4, and JBL Charge 6. I am currently undecided on what to get, is there a particular one you can recommend for me?

The one that I've used so far was JBL Charge 6. It has a very big bass beat and a very sound quality. It is very nice, strong and affordable and the battery lasts so well.

I have both products under consideration and am thinking about which one I should go for. Which ones amongst them would you say that you've had a better experience using and how long has it lasted with you?

I won't say JBL doesn't make quality products, but as long as we are talking about the one that you should pick which would offer you a whole lot, please go for Sony SRS-XV500.

I don't know what it costs in the market right now, but no matter the price, I would say it is a better option than any other model in that price range. You will come and thank me later after a year or two using it.

It is rugged and can withstand a lot during use.
