
Subject: Cats vs Speakers

Posted by Dean Kukral on Sun, 05 Sep 2004 18:33:22 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I notice that few of the woofers I've seen on ART have covers. Has anyone ever had problems with cats accidentally tearing up an uncovered woofer?

Subject: Re: Cats vs Speakers

Posted by Oberon on Sun, 05 Sep 2004 19:15:50 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I've had trouble with them but solved it with a grill. A barbeque grill, that is. Nyuk, nyuk, nyuk!

Subject: Re: Cats vs Speakers

Posted by elektratic on Mon, 06 Sep 2004 09:26:17 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Dean, We currently have three cats -- four until my dear Antigone, a/k/a "Tig", died at age 22 earlier this year. None has ever displayed any interest in any of my speaker drivers (or ports, some of which are probably big enough to allow them access!). All damage to drivers over the years has been caused by curious little fingers and vacuum hoses. I do have one cat who like to lie on my Welborne Reveille preamp during the winter so she can incubate -- or be incubated by -- the tubes protruding from the top cover, but that's another story . . . e
Antigone

Subject: Re: Cats vs Speakers

Posted by Bill Wassilak on Tue, 07 Sep 2004 19:07:55 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Only when my cat was a kitten, it ripped a hole in one of my surrounds playing around. but since it's gotten older it doesn't even mess with the speakers anymore.

Subject: Re: Cats vs Speakers

Posted by Bill Wassilak on Tue, 07 Sep 2004 19:17:24 GMT

My old cat that I had, use to love to sleep in the amp rack on my old system,1-Crown DC300A, 1-Crown D150, I kept forgetting to check the rack if the cat went missing for a few days, there she'd be.Bill W.
