Theatre 4 Pi and Studio 2 Pi I had to screw with Wayne-aligned Titanic 12 Not-Pi-aligned shipping box/95cent driver combo; veneer by United Fruit Co. Fostex 103E factory pans backhorns; "please Ed, don't hit me, I'm putting 8 hours on'm every day, I swear!"The reason I'm listening and not building a fricking thing right now. Sure wish I had built in Martinelli's Woodhorns!

Before my "favorite" speakers. She did not know whether to go shooting or listen to the stereo, either choice she needed the muffs.

Now there's a work of art. She's gorgeous! Don't forget that daughters are G-d's punishment to us for being guys;)I always used to greet my daughters dates at the door with a REMington 1100.

Then I'd hand it to'm and say,"here you go, kid, only use it if you have to".

The best place for research on hurdy-gurdy's is <http://www.hurdygurdy.com/hg/hghome.html> Briefly, a hurdy-gurdy has a crank attached to a wheel (4'-7") which spins against several strings, like a violin bow rubs against strings. Some strings are drones, while other strings go through a box with buttons in a standard keyboard pattern. The buttons push against the melody, or chanter, string(s), which shorten them and raises the pitch. These instruments sound like a small bagpipe with violin-like tone, with some small rattling mechanical noises also. Very medieval tone!Dave :^)

I mistakenly printed the wheel size in the above post. It should have read: 4"-7"The wheel seldom gets bigger then 7 inches.The website I gave in the previous post is only the starting point if you are interested in these instruments. A few months back I did a yahoo search for hurdy-gurdy and got several pages of links. There must be hundreds of sites on these instruments.BTW, because of health problems, I am no longer taking orders for instruments. I stopped building them over a year ago. Hopefully, someday I can start again, as they are fun to build.Dave

Those really are cool, Dave. I didn't know that your nickname referenced anything in particular, and now I know why you picked that moniker.I don't know that I've ever heard this instrument. Do you, by any chance, know of a song or movie or something that I might have heard one on?

Loreena McKennitt has a hurdy-gurdy on the opening of "Mummers Dance" on the CD Book of Secrets. There is a sample music file here. Just click on Mummers Dance.
<http://www.canehdian.com/artistlinks/loreenamckennitt/audio.html> That's the most popular one I can think of. Mostly, this instrument is best known in traditional french, celtic, spanish and british music, both folk, classical and medieval. Dave

I couldn't get "Mummer's Dance" to work in the previous link, so here is another. For phone modems, it takes a couple of minutes, but there is a nice sound sample at the bottom of the page. The opening instrument is a hurdy-gurdy. Dave

Hi Dave! Thanks for posting the link! I really like that sound, and of course, recognized that song. It was very popular. I'm so glad that I now know what made that enchanting sound. I had assumed it was a synthesizer; Never really thought about it actually. But to know it is an older traditional instrument is very interesting. I have always liked the sound of the sitar, because it also has a mesmerizing sound. Now I know another instrument that I feel the same way about - Sort of ancient and enchanting. Thanks so much for filling me in. Wayne

... my Bob Brines' TQWT's loaded with R/S 40-1354's. They don't have lots of bass, but they're nice and smooth and relaxed and I listen to them quite a bit with my Paramours. The beautiful (IMO) birch plywood cabinets were built by Mike Berg in Hudson, MA to Bob's design. There's no BSC network, Zobel filter, nor any driver treatments. The pipe is stuffed with polyester (pillow stuffing). BTW, I am "borrowing" the image from AudioKarma.org. Hope that's OK to all parties involved...

Hi Dave! I watched the movie "Soldier" the other night with a few friends. Do you know if a hurdy gurdy is used in the soundtrack anywhere in this movie? About halfway through it, I could have sworn I heard a hurdy gurdy being played. Wayne
