even though I understand your answer (favorite because of the bang-to-buck ratio), is there another that you would consider "best", even if the cost-to-value ratio was a lot higher?

The next choice would be the Eminence HL10a, but I'd never use that outside of a pro-sound application. The MCM 55-2421 is what I have in my own livingroom and recording studio subs, and it has nothing to do with price. I always place a premium on what works, and with that being satisfied I then go for value, not the other way around.

This is the MCM 55-2421 in a 3.3 cu ft 40 Hz folded horn; a larger box could be used to go to a lower Fc if desired.

Do you have a box plan or pictures for this folded horn anywhere? Do you use one or two in your system(s)?-Ian

Tuba 18 is going to appear in audioXpress magazine this fall, and after it has been published I'll have the projct available on my website. I only use one for my HT and have never come close to its capabilities. It will put out 115dB without even breaking into a sweat.
