For anyone who owns (and uses) a Mac: Having found a few PC emulator programs, none with which I'm familiar, I was hoping to get some experienced input with regard to the McBean Horn Response program. What particular emulation program seems to work the best for this application? More info available, if needed. Thanks, guys! -MB

Never mind! I just answered all my own Q's today, only to discover that I can't afford the answer, anyway! The Virtual PC program with the needed Microsoft Windows package to make McBean happen would cost $220+tax. Instead, I'll put my tax dollars to work at the local public library, by using THEIR computers! My appreciation to anyone who may have already invested some thought!

I was thinking these days, you can get a PC for under $500.00, so hardware emulators don't make much sense. Software emulators would no doubt suffice for DOS programs, mut might be slow or clunky for Windows stuff. But I haven't really kept up on Mac stuff. I know emulators are available, but don't know any specifics.

Perhaps one of the PC format manufacturers have a comparable software package for a more reasonable price. If you walk into a Mac store looking for PC anything, it'll cost you!
