Subject: Hay let's talk about planners and ribbon tweeters!!
Posted by djm on Wed, 01 Jun 2005 11:08:55 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I have a couple of questions for you diyers out there?? I am lookingat useing the b.g. neo 8's or the neo 3's planner tweeters. Has anyone used any of theses tweeters?? Are they a close sound tothe maggie planners or no? Second question. I was also looking intotrue ribbon tweeters like the raven's. Has anyone use them or heardthem? I hear they are very hard to get to sound right. That's whatparts experss told me and that is why they do not sell them any more.How do they sound to a planner tweeter. Also why do a lot of diyer'smod. them after they buy them? If they are not right when you buythem why buy them you know? I am also looking at kits for both types of tweeters. What is the best type of speaker driver to use with theses tweeters. It has to be clean fast and natural. If you can give some insights of tell me about your past kit's you did orhi-fi sytems and tweeking that would be great. P.s. I got rid of mymg 12's because the lower planner woofer keep making a buzzing noise everytime the bass hit or a rattleing noise. The company saidthat was not normal but, I think that is just the way they are.The treble and bass were at 0 and no loudness button was on.thanks jm

Subject: Re: Hay let's talk about planners and ribbon tweeters!!
Posted by lcholke on Mon, 20 Jun 2005 11:01:26 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

djm,I did a pair of ribbons with not to much trouble. I think they are fast and detailed like any other ribbon I have heard. If you DIY your own then the radiating area can be made rather large. The one I made is 7" x .37 ". My plan is to make a 1 meter pair, semi open baffle.-Linc