

---

Subject: Hay let's talk about planners and ribbon tweeters!!

Posted by djm on Wed, 01 Jun 2005 11:08:55 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I have a couple of questions for you diyers out there?? I am looking at using the b.g. neo 8's or the neo 3's planner tweeters. Has anyone used any of these tweeters?? Are they a close sound to the maggie planners or no? Second question. I was also looking into true ribbon tweeters like the raven's. Has anyone use them or heard them? I hear they are very hard to get to sound right. That's what parts experts told me and that is why they do not sell them any more. How do they sound to a planner tweeter. Also why do a lot of diyer's mod. them after they buy them? If they are not right when you buy them why buy them you know? I am also looking at kits for both types of tweeters. What is the best type of speaker driver to use with these tweeters. It has to be clean fast and natural. If you can give some insights or tell me about your past kit's you did or hi-fi systems and tweeking that would be great. P.s. I got rid of my mg 12's because the lower planner woofer keep making a buzzing noise everytime the bass hit or a rattling noise. The company said that was not normal but, I think that is just the way they are. The treble and bass were at 0 and no loudness button was on. thanks jm

---

---

Subject: Re: Hay let's talk about planners and ribbon tweeters!!

Posted by lcholke on Mon, 20 Jun 2005 11:01:26 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

djm, I did a pair of ribbons with not too much trouble. I think they are fast and detailed like any other ribbon I have heard. If you DIY your own then the radiating area can be made rather large. The one I made is 7" x .37". My plan is to make a 1 meter pair, semi open baffle. -Linc

---