I prefer to have XM satellite radio. The audio quality of XM is better compared to sirius. And the music in XM are the best to listen.

My parents have both. They had XM in their house, then they bought a car that had Sirius. They seem to like the music choices on Sirius better, so they cancelled their XM. I have XM in my car and am very happy with it. Your best bet is to check the channel line-ups on line to see what's to your liking. It looks like they may be merging anyway, in which case they'll probably be offering different radio packages, and eliminating some channels on each.

My parents had XM in their home, then got a car with Sirius. They liked the Sirius better for the variety of programming. I have XM in my car and am very happy with it. Your best bet is to check the channel lineups on-line for each service to see what suits you best. It looks like they may be merging in the near future anyway, in which case it's rumored they'll drop some stations and offer different platforms or channel line-ups.

I've been enjoying the Sirius channel that my favourite bar/restaurant has playing when sports aren't on. Although they play classic rock, so I think it's probably easier to come up with a good playlist than it may be for more current music.

I have friends who have Sirius and they like it a lot so I think that would be a good one.

I have talked to people who have both, (I personally have not taken the plunge.) Sirius has more programming available according to some people. It is a tough call, but here is a site that gives you a side by side comparison:<http://www.radiosatellite.org/>

I had Sirius and then switched to XM. I liked the channel lineup on XM better. I never noticed in difference in the sound quality myself.

I think people are pretty much split down the middle on this one. I used to work in a restaurant that had XM and I loved it. I have friends who have Sirius and, personally, I don't like it at all.

I recently purchased sirius and like it very much. I guess the best way to see which is right for you is to find people who have both and listen to the programming and sound.

Definitely check the channel lineups before making a purchase. As for myself I like XM. My husband is thinking about going with Sirius for his vehicle.

I have this with my TV service (Dish Networks) but is it possible to use it with say, a smartphone for example? I was thinking about getting it in my car but sometimes I take the truck to work too so if it were on my phone I could use it in either...

We rented a vehicle with Sirius in it and we loved it! We considered buying it for our home and our vehicle too but we just haven't yet. I think it just depends upon the individual's taste, just as cable TV lineups are.

I was told that Sirius bought out XM, so it probably want make much of a difference. I do know that XM has been around a little longer.

I am thinking XM in the car now and Sirius to keep at home (its free anyways, why pay for it unless I can get some crazy discount).

XM works very good in most places (I live in redneck land) but Sirius tends to flake out a little in some spots.

I haven't used Sirius but I have had XM for 4 years now and I love it. The sound quality is great and they have the stations I want to listen to.
