Whenever I come to this forum the pages that gets diplayed are old. I can't seem to get the latest messages. I think it has to do with cookies or something but can't seem to figure out the sequence to do this. I tried getting out of Explorer then typing in Audioroundtable.com, then click on a forum but I always get the same old page again. Anyone know the sequence to get the latest page?

Yeah, the "Refresh" button is sort of like my "check for posts" button. I also use it to confirm I actually made a post instead of just doing a "Preview." I usually preview before I post, but sometimes when I'm in a hurry, I forget to actually post. So I make it a habit to hit back a couple times, get to the index page and click "Refresh" to make sure my post is there. Same kind of thing, I always click "Refresh" when I go into a forum to see if anyone else has made new posts. Otherwise, I only see what the browser has cached, which may be yesterday's news.

Yep, that's the first thing I tried and its still the same old page keeps coming up. It might be something in my settings that's not selected. The problem is to find which one is it. Very odd and a pain in the b*tt. I did update it a few times by hunting and pecking but couldn't remember what I did exactly. I'll keep trying....

That is an odd symptom indeed.  Hope it's nothing serious.  Maybe reinstall your web browser?
