Subject: Philco Stereophonic Hi-Fi PhonoRama VI
Posted by Franc Alonso on Thu, 20 Mar 2008 22:06:19 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hello,I have had in my possession since 1995 from my grandfathers home a Philco Stereophonic Hi-Fi PhonoRama VI... It works and aside from a few aged issues appears to be quite a gem for a vintage audio enthusiast.How can I place a value on this piece? I would appreciate any rapport from anyone knowledgeable ...Thank you,Franc Alonsohkfranc@hotmail.com

Subject: Re: Philco Stereophonic Hi-Fi PhonoRama VI
Posted by Wayne Parham on Mon, 24 Mar 2008 22:27:34 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

My experience is the value of most of these old systems is usually intrinsic. The value is knowing that your grandfather owned and enjoyed it. It is retro and a cool conversation piece. Those are the things that make them valuable.If you must put a dollar figure on it, console stereos like yours are usually worth $50 - $500.There are some collectables that are worth more, and you can find info on them with a little bit of searching. Old Macintosh hifi equipment, Western Electric, Altec Lansing and RCA theater systems are sometimes sought after, depending on model. There are others; Those were just some examples.