Would you bet against Mark Levinson and Dick Burwen? They have a new format that exists on your PC. Using Bobcat, a Lynx-based language, and a USB DAC developed by Burwen, this was the best kept secret of C.E.S. Watch for this cat!

Bill; why would this signal processor be any different than the other signal processors? Turning an analog signal into a digital algorithm that is supposed to sound analog; is it really good? Don't they always make these claims whenever a new digital processing plan comes out? Are you saying this because you heard it?

First heard of it today from a U.S. distributor of several audio lines. He heard it at CES. We had been talking about "the death of the CD". Search your memory of the years 1983 to 1990 when every monthly issue of Stereophile saw "the next great DAC"; single bit, multi-bits, upsampling etc. My source also alluded to a visit he made recently to some folks who have "rack after rack" of CD's and Records. And their son walked through listening to an iPod! OTH, I don't have to back-up my CD's every night and keep dupes in a Limestone cavern in Utah:)

Maybe there is no "better" to be had ever, maybe the vinyl was the pinnacle of reproduction and that's all. Now there will be an endless spiral of less and less enjoyable but more convenient to use media. I love my CD's they are so easy to use. There is always hope on the horizon but I might be doomed to eternal disappointment.
