Subject: solid state guitar amp ..... wanna make a kzillion$?
Posted by hitsware on Wed, 15 Dec 2004 02:27:36 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

If someone could do a ss amp for guitar ..... that 'sings' like a Marshal or Fender ..... It would have to be used (and endorsed) by some big time player .....So much cheaper with 'ss' .... watts/$ (cringe(thinking@$))

Subject: Re: solid state guitar amp ..... wanna make a kzillion$?
Posted by Wayne Parham on Thu, 16 Dec 2004 06:22:38 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think a lot of the modeling amps are solid state with processors to make 'em sound like a variety of different classic models.

Subject: Re: solid state guitar amp ..... wanna make a kzillion$?
Posted by hitsware on Thu, 16 Dec 2004 15:48:00 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

>I think a lot of the modeling amps are solid state with processors to make 'em sound like a variety of different classic models.Yea.....As well as 'practice' amps, but none of these are used on stage by a big time performer (as far as I know (I think you'd see it in the advertising if they were)). What I'm saying if one could develope a ss amp that became a well known (and liked) sound on it's own rather than a cheap emulation of something else.....mike

Subject: Re: solid state guitar amp ..... wanna make a kzillion$?
Posted by Metal Mike on Thu, 30 Dec 2004 17:36:43 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

The Randall WarHead is solid state, But not exactly inexpensive

Subject: Re: solid state guitar amp ..... wanna make a kzillion$?
Posted by hitsware on Thu, 30 Dec 2004 20:39:09 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Do you think any players of consequence actually use them ? I had a Randall (for a short time) and it was terrible. This was, however, some years ago so their design may have improved ?