I'd love to see a sort of "show and tell" here, with photos of your favorite projects. Tutorials are really helpful, and I think that's what this forum is probably best for. But I'm into immediate gratification this time, and I'd just like to see your favorite projects. Speaker cabinets, amplifier and preamp bases, or even non-A/V projects. One of the things I really find attractive is the two-tone look. Chess boards made with a dark wood and a light wood look rich. Old tube radios often had two-tone laminates, and are sometimes stunningly intricate and beautiful. So that's a look I really like, and there are a lot of other great looks. What are your favorites?

The Boss says link this post, so: Show and Tell Lot's of ways to do Pi. Read an interesting post about speaker cone coatings. Beyond shellac and varnish. GILT! Yes, some guys at full range are gilding cones with gold leaf! Could be interesting. Maybe try the 95 cent drivers first. Hey Wayne, does Alona know about Guesso? You know the gold paint/plaster coating on Icons?

Guesso is what that stuff is called? I always thought it was just some sort of shellac. Did you watch the History channel special about relics? Yikes! Fingers and guts and stuff. The Uncorruptables endure having their fingers and limbs pulled off and sent around the world. OK. That's way off-topic and not even in particularly good taste. The moderator will probably need to deal with me very strictly. More trivial trivia - Most Russian nouns end with a consonant if masculine or "a" or "ya" if feminine. Not all nouns, of course, but most. There are exceptions (neuter nouns), like "moloko" is milk and "delo" is routine matters. "Guesso" must be groovy special shellac.
