Subject: There's just something about wheels
Posted by BillEpstein on Sat, 19 Jul 2003 21:52:24 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Not as chic for audio as at LeMans or the Nurburgring; but, pause to remember that John Wolfe's amazingly loud and lifelike wall of sound in Lima was created by those Altec clones on Gerber casters.Sure, 10 pound monitors need cones and blu-tack and sand and....But 150 pound horns? Naaah.Fire up the Pignatelli and race on down to Depot or Lowe's and get Gerber ball casters with plate attachment. One style I like is a black ball in a brass housing, about $4 each.

Subject: Re: There's just something about wheels
Posted by Wayne Parham on Sun, 20 Jul 2003 02:31:44 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I just sold the Porsche today. Michael is driving these days and there were just too many cars around the house. Alona's, Michael's and mine. And since I've got the Olds as a toy, along with another daily driver just like it, I really didn't have any business having two toys. Many would have moved one of the Olds but I decided to part with the Porsche. It was kinda a drag. Not the car, but parting with it. I like stuff that's made in America, but German cars definitely don't suck.