Just watched this 2000 release of director Chris Nolan with Guy Pearce and Carrie-Ann Moss. Very cerebral, excellent character role from Joe Pantoliano. Lot's of twists and turns and an ending you can chew on for a while.

Isn't that the one where the guy gets tattoos of images of events of his life so he'll remember them? Somebody told me about that one, but I never got around to seeing it. I'll have to watch it soon.

It's incredible for the fare that normally comes down the tubefrom H'wood etc., even though this was an indie release. I watched it 2x back to back.

Thanks for pointing it out with an exclamation point. I'm pretty busy these days, but I'll be sure make time to check it out soon.
