gday all!I've contune DIY using marble. I showed my subwoofer Alto Stradivarius before. it's perfect. long time I working, I'm looking for disign for satelites. It's must have the same view like sub. but now I find the way.for my opinion it's should be marble front panel and stand. driver - coacsial Focal. back side and sidewall - red wood (mahogany)with open top side. I have 3D Max picture yet.http://www.artmaydan.org.ua/satelites.htmlgoods not ready, so, I can't show the photo. it's takes me few week.I ask all of you for any suggestions about it.

It is very interesting, Yuri. I expect it will sound good too. The only problem is that it is so heavy, it must be difficult to move and expensive to ship. Solve the shipping problem and I think you have a winner.I see that it is 30 liters. Is the box sealed or ported? If ported, what frequency is it tuned to? What woofer do you use?

right, Wayne!FedEx and other won't deliver goods more, then 32 kg. my Alto has 50 kg. it's ported sub. I made it about 20hz advisedly. it's low end system, normaly work from 20 to 60-80 hz. woofer "Aliance marketing grop". 10" for Alto, 12"for Tenor and 2*10" for Bass. made in USA but I think from China realy. nice driver. I tested lot of speaker and select this one.I've plan to use Focal in the satelites. this is nice driver too. I'm still need suggection about satelites. please let me know your opinion.

About the satellites, a lot of people really like Fostex and I think you would be pleased with them.It would also be interesting if you could find a good Russian driver.

Coaxial is fine. The open baffle means you may prefer a speaker with high Q. Fostex is a Japanese company.

with great pleasure I'll post photo of exhibition. but it will be at November :(marble made for me professional sculptor. he has nick name Stradivarius from childhood. but he never made violines, he always made stone. he and me was fanatics of rock music before. Led Zeppelin, Deep, other... he has feeling of sound, very sensitive man for orchestra balance, although he hasn't musical education. I have it. and I was explane him all of musical nuances. features of any musical instruments.and when I asked him about stone case for subwoofer, he sayed yes at ones.we was broken lot of marble before get result. but now I'm realy take pride in the Alto. it has very generous view, it's almost shine within.Alto not agressive at all. it's quiet and make our room imposing.ok. sorry for lirics.all of masters join into my web portal. some makes picture, someone - frging, other - stained glass, some - valve amplifier. my favorite - Samod makes MOSFET amplifier for my subwoofer.

I went to the website and saw that the Hi-Fi show is scheduled for November 4-7, 2004. In fact, I posted an announcement link in the General forum.I'm impressed that you carve the marble for your speakers. That is really great. I still think it might be worthwhile to find a shipper so that you could provide those outside of Europe. Maybe an Odessa shipper. Maybe a Logistics company here in America. I don't know, but I think it might be worthwhile to investigate.I saw your tube amplifier on your website. What model is that? Your subwoofer is driven by a MOSFET amp made by Samod, yes? Do you know if they have a website on the internet?

I saw your announcement there. it's ok. I'll be show all of photo I'll get. marble satelites must open market for accoustic set for me.I hope to success in the show. I won't promote sub before. some clients rarely bought it as wonder trifle. it's pitty for me. and expencive for them. ok. not problem. my friend from NY ready for sale Alto via e-bay, but I couldn't send it without satelites yet. and without victory in the show either.Samod be shy to write there. he has own web site http://www.kievsat.com/main/amplifiers/feedback@usa.net (he is from Ukraine, like me, not USA)ICQ: 200153104he's shy to write English, although he is genius of electronics.you can ask him Russian as well
