Oh, wow, cool! George Augspurger is a smart guy and I expect a software product that implements his design ideas would be good. I did a quick search of Old Colony and found they also publish books from Bill Fitzmaurice and Charles Hansen, both of whom are very active in audio discussion groups and the DIY community in general. They've also distributed material from Bruce Rozenblit, Vance Dickson, Joseph D'Appolito, David Weems, Robert Bullock and Robert White, among others. So Old Colony seems like a pretty cool publisher.

Old Colony is the book publishing division of _aX_. And I've subscribed to _audioXpress for 4 years or so. It is celebrating its 35 anniversary. So I have seen the Old Colony book list before. But in all these years I have not seen much about what might be a competitive program to the work of Martin King. Augspurger is referred to in technical articles, but an implementation of a design program, to my knowledge, was never written up in _aX_. I would have to check my old issues. _aX_ is now available on CD ROM for subscribers to the print version. BTW Old Colony is also reprinting the complete monthly publication called ... name escapes me.... in 2 volumes from the '70s. This magazine had all the breakthrough work for the emerging audiophile community. Anyone can get the Old Colony catalog from a request to www.custserve@audioXpress.com.
