
Subject: importing speakers into australia
Posted by freo on Thu, 09 Dec 2004 04:25:07 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Has anyone imported Pi speakers into Australia? I am trying to work out how cost efective this would be, working out the price of the kits to the cost of the drivers here in Australia, the kits win by a country mile, just wondering if anyone has experienced any problems with customs and import duty. Regards and thanks in advance Roger

Subject: Re: importing speakers into australia
Posted by Wayne Parham on Thu, 09 Dec 2004 04:54:46 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

We've sent several things surface parsel post and there have been no problems going into Australia. No one has mentioned having to pay customs fees. Some places are better going with another carrier but Canada and Australia have been pretty good going USPS insured.

Subject: thanks for the reply Wayne n/t
Posted by freo on Thu, 09 Dec 2004 11:02:41 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Subject: Re: thanks for the reply Wayne n/t
Posted by Mike.e on Thu, 09 Dec 2004 11:26:42 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

In NZ atleast,there are no customs charges if the contents are below a certain value,approx $400 ive heard.There is an eminence distributor in Oz(if thats what your were looking for),
'CMI'Cheers!Mike.e

Subject: Re: importing speakers into australia
Posted by Adrian Mack on Fri, 10 Dec 2004 01:23:42 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Try www.bmusic.com.au I've ordered Eminence stuff from their and are the cheapest Eminence distributor in Australia that I could find. Its not on their website so you'll have to email them, but they carry a full range of Eminence gear, including crossovers.
