Hi all! i just saw this lunatic movie on TV lastnite- it had me thinking all night trying to figure out the plot! Unfortunately i missed the first 10minutes so miss the point of the blue box/key thing.I reccomend it to all who enjoy thinking a little!"The scary cowboy! The mysterious box! All that sex! We answer all your questions about David Lynch's latest outrage -- the weirdest movie of the year...Oct. 23, 2001 | "Mulholland Drive," the latest feature from director David Lynch, is exhilarating -- two hours and 25 minutes of macabre thrills, highly charged erotica and indelible images. But it's also confusing. Bits and pieces of plot dribble out; characters appear and disappear; the film takes an incomprehensible turn two-thirds of the way through; and there seem to be three or four disparate story lines that have virtually nothing to do with one another. we dont get many good movies here on TV-ever since the broadcasting fee of $100 per yr was gone,its just gone downhill!!!I only watch 2 shows a week!btw - You how have britain have those 'warehouse parties'? and how its all 'underground'? well it really is! Did you know that a group of 10people assembling at one point, with 'repetitive beats' is illegal in britain? The clubs are so aweful,expensive,that they go out in the open air and rave! Gota take your own ~25kva generator though!No wonder their soundsystems look so crappy-they keep getting them taken by the police :P

I'm laughing about the "nanny state" comment. But I can't laugh too loud 'cause we're in kinda the same situation in some ways. My state is probably less controlling than some places, but everywhere I see clamps on freedoms. Can't smoke in public, better watch your comments too. Tell a politically sensitive girl she's wearing a beautiful blouse and you might have to defend yourself for harassment. Take a religous item to school and you could get sent home, even suspended. Say a culteral or ethnic joke and you might be seen as prejudiced, maybe even taken to court.Oh, shit. I made a point of not making any political comments on this website. I just blew it. Now that I've laughed at the "nanny state" comment, I just might get busted for it.

Here,smoking is being banned in all clubs and pubs in the next month!Sure its nice to not have smoke around killing you,but when your government forces things like this its ridiculous.Soon sugar,sweets and suchlike will be banned ;-POur liberalist party does this sort of thing more than the conservative right...I notice that alot of new legislation that seems good and increases peoples rights etc,actualy does the opposite. Its like theres something behind all these ideas and legislations coming from somewhere,which is a negative force.its crazy isnt it,because theres no need for all the fuss!

I agree completely.Back to the movie, after I wrote my first reply to you I went and checked out the movie some more. Then I realized that I had seen it and just forgot the name. I sure didn't forget the brunette chick though (Laura Harring). Rebekah Del Rio's spanish version of Roy Orbison's "Crying" is wonderful too, takes your breath away.

Naomi Watts isn't bad, either! David Lynch is great - any of you guys liked his TV-series "Twin Peaks"? Has a good soundtrack, too.Wayne, stop being political! I'm already on a message board dominated by right winged socalled Christians... Pretty windy there for a lefty like me

Yeah - I do participate in debates in relevant places, but I think one should keep the (political) discussions there

When is she going to be making some more movies. What a knockout. yeah, when I saw Mulholland, I ran it through 2x as well.Today I am re-viewing "Impostor", based on a Philip K. Dicknovel. That show sure didn't get much respect when itcame out.

Can't we just have a "Leave Me Alone" party? Maybe "Don't Tread on Me" could be the slogan. Don't fly planes into our buildings, neither make me wear a GPS monitor to come and go.I remember we used to think of the Soviets as having too much red tape. And if you think of socialism as redistribution of wealth, what exactly are taxes and entitlements?Alice and Wonderland: Left is Right, Up is Down.Oops. That was supposed to be the inside voice. Damnit, I did it again. I take it back; I didn't say anything. This is a forum about movies. So that was a comments about, uh, Alice and Wonderland. Yeah, that's the ticket.

Laura Harring is lovely, isn't she? What did you think of Rebekah Del Rio's version of Crying?

We used to talk about speakers sometimes. Not much trafficin the other forums. Before all this started I figured I'd live out my daysbeing able to assemble SET amps once I learned how. NowI'm a lot less sure. Saw "And Starring Pancho Villa As Himself" tonight.Another good yarn about revolution (with the first embeddedfilm crew.)

Yeah, I guess everyone is busy with other stuff. It does seem kinda slow. Fitzmaurices' forum is rates, but the others seem slower than normal.What's going on with you these days? I'm busy, busy, busy. New work on several speaker projects. So I'm making posts here and there about progress when I have something to report. Otherwise, I'm behind the scenes. Lots of exciting things going on, to tell the truth.

Yes, Wayne, I saw the film 2x. You seem to have quite a stache of LH pix. Better than I could find. Too bad the films she is in are crap, or in the international-only market or both. Well, we could always talk about my favorite: Ann Francis as Honey West.

When Mike mentioned "Mullholland Drive," I did a search of the internet to see if I could identify it. As soon as I saw a couple of the scenes of the film, I remembered it. All the photos of Laura Harring are from her website or Google.
