Just checked again, seems to be fine now. I must be losing it. lol----------I always lurk at this site as I am hooked on corner horns. I have an old vintage pair but I am looking to upgrade to modern corner horns using JBL drivers sometime in the future. I have to complete my 22' x 25' family room first and need to research proper construction techniques so the nails do not pop out of my drywall. lol. A question for Wayne: What is the difference in construction between a standard cabinet and a Grande cabinet? I may have missed the information on your site, so I apologize ahead of time.Regards,Bill

Use drywall adhesive and just a nail or screw at top and bottom of panels. Keeps the panels from dishing in and out with the studs which are never perfectly aligned. And less sanding.

Standard cabinets are very nicely done, but Grande cabinets are truly works of art. They are just more finely done craftsmanship and with audiophile crossover components used throughout.
